PEOPLE IN THE SOUTH

Late advices from Florida are sufficiently diffuse and attractive to create feelings of wildest envy and deepest despair among those of us whom stern necessity compels to brave weather like that of last week, and to stay resignedly at home.

I met one of the most elegant of the city's matrons plowing through Cabanne mud last Thursday. As a matter of fact, we collided on a narrow crossing, and each had begun on a narrow crossing, and each had begun to apologize profusely before we recognized

"Now, isn't this the vilest climate on the face of the globe" she cried. "Whenever I think of St. Louis weather I'm always reminded of the man who suffered a leg amputation and was told by his sympathetic friends to 'grin and bear it.'
"Til bear it, all right, he replied, grimly, 'but I'm dashed if I'll grin.'

"That's the way I always feel about this Mississippi Valley climate."

Rather a good joke on some of the people who went South with trunks full of "good, warm clothing," having been informed by somebody who didn't know that Florida was in the throes of the coldest winter the State had ever known. When the McMillan-Thornburgh party reached St. Augustine they found the thermometer St, and, accordingly, got out all their muslin shirt waists. Going on to Miami they discovered a rise of five degrees, and promtply consigned all that "good, warm clothing" to the depths of trunks, and bethought themselves of thin white Indian linens and French lawn frocks, with plenty of open-work embroid-frocks, with plenty of open-work embroid-ery. Now at Palm Beach they find that the little glass tube says 'ninety-eight' and that the weather is becoming uncomfortably warm for sojourning. So they will all start for the North very shortly.

Society girls so seldom take up music seriously and work at the art with ambition that goes ahead of anything more than a little parlor amusement, that I was much surprised the other day to hear of Miss Virginia Lee's delightful accomplishment along

She has a clear, high woprano voice of much culture and considerable range, and practices with all the diligence of the hardest-worked Metropolitan Opera-house sing-er. Miss Lee particularly enjoys the singing of church music, and has all this winter been an understudy in the choir of St. Xavier's getting lots of practice and much valuable knowledge of the fine old mass music. She is shortly to blossom as a solo-ter at this church alternating with the othlist at this church, alternating with the oth er singers, and her friends are eagerly an-ticipating her debut. For several seasons she has studied choral singing with the Morning Choral Club an is one of the most valued members of that Intimate friends of the Ben Langs, wh have this winter moved into their attractive Cabanne home-a wedding gift from Mrs. Lang's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Taussis have quite become accustomed to taking possession of the third-story ballroom on Saturday evenings and enjoying little informal dances with all the zest that they would experience were the affairs larger and more diguined. The club, if so it can be called, gathers itself together and meets as I have said, on Saturday nights. Cabanne young people compose it, in the main.

C Yours truly I have printed the above letter in full. answer to these just how to make my

In the first place, Miss I. G. M., you are evidently a young woman of some educa-tion and refinement. 'How a girl of your sort could ever be drawn into corresponding with a "man whom she has never seen," is heyond me.

Have you read the daily papers this last week, and seen column after column of printed matter relating to the various matrimonial frauds who have been conducting a monial frauds who have been conducting a business with girls just like yourself, and who have been arrested and exposed, with a probable ending of their days in the Pentientiarry? If you have not read of these exposures, then for goodness sake ask some of your elderly friends to explain matters of this kind, and, by every hope of your future happiness, be guided by their counsel and steer clear of any and all men who desire to correspond with you and who are strangers to you and your kin.

Any girl who is drawn into correspondence with a strange man, and who keeps it up for a lark, deserves just exactly what she gets—loss of her money and a very probgets—loss of her money and a very prob-able loss of ner good name. I cannot put the case too strongly or too warningly to you. Don't write another letter to any man whom you don't know, and above all things whom you don't know, and above all things don't exchange any photographs (not photos), and don't ask him to call on you when he is in town. Avoid him altogether. He's a bad lot, or he never would try to make your acquaintance in any sich underhand manner. No gentieman, my dear, ever sikk to know a girl unless all the arrangements are open and aboveboard. If this man who writes to you were a gentieman, he would have sought you out among your friends.

No; a gentlewoman certainly must not ask any of her men friends to send her stamps, any more than she would think of asking them for money to buy her handkerchiefs

Madison University and Vassar were hostesses yesterday afternoon in the cozy rooms of the College Club at the Conservatorium. By way of calivening the general monotony a vaudeville show was planned by the en-tertainers, and very successful it proved. Florence Eiseman, Mrs. Joseph Lewis, Elizabeth Moore, Mrs. George Vieh and Ma-bel Riddle had charge of the programme, which was a lively one from start to finish and much enjoyed by the members, who turned out in full force.

Mrs. Vieh and her clever musical husband superficiel the andlence with their brilliant nue, at 10 o'clock.

The Literary Symposium spent an enjoyable hour with Dickens Thursday morning. Mrs. Griffith gave a running sketch of his literary career. She considered that he had done more to amuse and brighten the world chan any other novelist. At the same time, he gained the world's sympathy for the poor and degraded by exposing the corruption of courts, prisons and siums. He created more designtful characters in fiction, more interesting couples and family groups than any other writer. Among many pen portraits and sketches, perhaps the best were Mr. Pickwick and Sam Weller, the noted breach-of-promise trial, Bardell versus Pickwick; and David Capperfield wooing Dora. "The Old Curlosity Shop" is the study for Thursday at Hotel Beers. A general request was made for Mrs. Griffith to repeat her talk. "The Bible as Literature." A committee was then appointed to decide upon the time and place.

The meeting of the Clotho Cinb on Friday, February 27, at Mrs. Reynoids a house, No. 416 Cook avenue, was well attended and much enjoyed. The roll call brought out an unusual number of fine santiments on the subject of "My Highest Duty," that of Mrs. Werth being voted as the best. In the absence of Mis. Benton har paper on "The Socialist Party in America and Abroag" was read by Mrs. Ferguson. A fine paper on More's "Utopia," by Mrs. Begg, was listened to with much interest. Dr. Barnard read a very instructive and entertaining article from a medical work concerning the originator of higodless syrgery, now so much talked about. The pioneer in this work was an Italian woman named Regina Bal Cin, who, after long years of successful work without a license in her own and other European countries, was finally granted a diploma by the learned doctors. She came to this country, but was so coldly received by the American physicians that she returned to Europe without applying her methods in America. After the usual order of business had been transacted a repast was served by the hostess and the ladles were entertained with vocal and instrumental selections by the young daughter of the house, who is a fine musician. The next meeting of the club will be at the residence of Doctor Bar-
